FOREWORD

IT was the gracious kindliness of Foxwell in permitting an awed novice in the summer of 1895—annus mirabilis as only a first visit to England can hallow a year—to examine the great collection of Economica which then overflowed his cases in St. John's College, that gave the first impulse to the present collection. His dei majores—Newcomb, Patten and Clark—had equipped the young traveller with introductions, and with Marshall as philosopher, Edgeworth as friend, Higgs as guide, and Bonar, many times all three, he was led to George Harding, then easily the first among English book dealers interested in economic literature. In the little Museum Street cubby-hole, snugly hidden in the shadow of the British Museum and opposite the Bookbinders' Cooperative—they did his Oncken, just acquired, in deathless pigskin—this aspirant spent happy hours and indiscreet shillings from a none too well filled purse. But what purchases! For Harding although a good shopman was a sound counsellor, and there grew between us a friendship akin, if small things may be compared with great, to that between Quaritch and McCulloch—of which Quaritch himself told me one murky afternoon in his Piccadilly office. Harding's parting gift—dolt-like, I wounded him by offering payment—was the original membership card (3912, within) of one of his own kinsmen in the National Anti-Corn Law League, with its moving vignette. Thence came my first editions of Mun, Child, Petty, Graunt, Stuart, Adam Smith, Godwin, Malthus and of the Ricardian tracts. Sprague lived in the same Bloomsbury boarding house and Hull, putting the last touches to his Petty, around the corner; and there was generous rivalry over new finds. An interest in economic personalia traces back to the same happy summer. Asher Meyers gave me the Phillips portrait of Ricardo that ever since has hung as patron saint above my desk; Daniels supplied the Linnell mezzotint of Malthus; Hollyer struck off "to order" a copy of the Watts head of Mill, and the sentimental journey of a political economist brought prized souvenirs, from Bath, in whose 'glass house' Malthus' body lies; long after I visited the Priory, near Dorking, his birth-place, and my young daughter took snap-shots, one of which went properly enough to Bonar; from Gatcomb Park, where the tradition still lingered that the four caryatids of Ricardo's incredible tomb were in reminder of the economist's four daughters; and from Edinburgh—almost! For a fickle bicycle played me false on Hadrian's Wall,—"humpty-dumpty," my travelling companions the John Martin Vincents, call me to this day—and thence woefully to Bloomsbury and hot applications! But many years later, one of my own students, Broadus Mitchell, mindful of the loss, visited Canongate Churchyard and sent me photographs and post-cards. And in the meantime back in London I had established relations with Rathbone, most prickly of porcupines but master of Wedgwood, that resulted after long waiting in that desirable of desirables—the Tassie medallion of Adam Smith in the original enamel (3877).

If my passion for the classical economists 'in the skin' goes back to George Harding, assuredly I owe my fondness for the pre-Adamite texts to Seligman. Who among the young economists of the last generation—for he was as he remains, host to many and gracious to all—will ever forget the nobility of that 86th street library and its contents. In the greater formality of its new setting the "Seligman Library" will bring aid to successive generations of students. May it also bring the old thrill!

Form and direction were given in 1908 to the growing collection by the common interest, reached from different approaches, which Charles M. Andrews, then at Johns Hopkins, and I found in Joseph Massie's "Alphabetical and Chronological Index of Commercial Books and Pamphlets." The particulars of Massie's life are hidden in the same irritating obscurity that enshrouds other notable English economic writers of the middle eighteenth century; we know only of his literary productivity from 1750 to 1765, and of his death in 1784. The "Fifteen Hundred, or more, Books and Pamphlets" concerning "the Commerce, Coin, and Colonies of Great Britain" which he had been " above Twelve Years in making"—though he "resided in London; and was not sparing of either Time or Money"—were sold in 1760, and thereafter dispersed, lost or hidden, how and in what manner we have no knowledge. But even after he had disposed of the actual collection, Massie continued to revise and extend an admirably compiled finding-list, and this "Index," which by December 1764 had grown to 2377 items, still serves as a helpful guide to English economic literature before Adam Smith. Andrews and I had a transcript (3929, within) made from the original resting among the Lansdowne MSS. in the British Museum, and I ventured to check off those of the items which were on my own shelves. Ever since—partly in the fantasy of "reconstructing" a great collection, partly because the reliance is sound—I have been ardent in the pursuit of "Massie items."

An 'economic library' may be designed for different purposes. Mine has been, with a fair degree of consistency, to document the doctrinal growth of the science. I have included— at least in this catalogue—only those compositions which withstood the test, omitting legal and political tracts. As Massie, I have begun with the last quarter of the sixteenth century and taken as the dividing zone of the longer span the middle of the eighteenth century, when tracts gave way to treatises and monographs to systems. Malthus' "Essay" marks, naturally enough, the close of the "middle period," and it, in turn, comes to an end with the early years of the twentieth century. I have rested with Marshall and those whom he fired. This is the terminal of my devotion. Books of the day mass about me, and I pay homage. But it is for those who come after to determine which of the new vintages shall be racked. Only as to the work of those who have been and, happily, still are my close associates in the Department of Political Economy of The Johns Hopkins University— Barnett, Weyforth, Mitchell, Evans, Cooper, Bullock—work that I have been permitted to follow in the making, has this rule been waived. I have not dared extend the license to the long line of students who have worked with me in Baltimore. May Clio be gracious!

The arrangement has thus been chronological; but I have not hesitated—when it seemed reasonable—to blur the separation by placing in order the several works of an author under the year in which his first composition appeared. I have added in separate place as many, as it has been possible in these years to have about me, of the portraits of those whom our craft delights to honor; as well as the letters, manuscripts and personalia that by circumstance or endeavor have come my way.

I may not claim Adam Smith's merit as a beau in my books—pardonable hyperbole as Bonar's toil has shown. But the state and the dress of a book have always stirred me. When no mint copy was to be had, place for the time has been given to a cripple—in extreme case mended by the wizardry of Pratt, the last of the craftsmen of his kind. Sometimes I have made sad mistakes as in breaking up three volumes of excise tracts that belonged to George Rose, in mechanical compliance—despite Stevens' protest—with the rule of one imprint, one book. But in the main I have made salaam to original garb and distinguished ownership. For the binding and rebinding that has been necessary I owe most to Sangorski & Sutcliffe, whom I learned to know almost at the outset of their business life through Turbayne, their teacher and friend—as mine; in later years the good offices of Stevens have bridged the Atlantic in this service.

It is as a souvenir of such good hunting that this compilation has been prepared. I have not risked chilling the intimacy of long association by stern devices of cataloguing and bibliography. The collection has grown as part of me, and I cannot at this stage play drill master.

I should like to think of myself as one of the company—far below the salt!—Massie, McCulloch, Foxwell, Seligman, Bell, Wagner, stout members of the crew of a 'Stultifera Navis'—Osler's coterie of bibliophiles, in which I was given undeserved place—who have cared for books not only as tools of their trade, but as living things to be assembled for their distinction, to be admired for their elegance, to be cherished for their association. Gilman once said to me that the most delightful avocation of a scholar was to gather and revere the monuments of his science. I have found it so.
